Merleau-Ponty, Maurice. This time around, abat, an owl, a cat, a ghost, a goblin. Despite those injustices, their tales of unquestioned bravery, sacrifice, and commitment personified valor and helped to reshape what it means to be an American. I'm looking for a suspense novel, probably quite recent which I think takes place in England. You can't see The Colorful One (From the Deep Book 419). Reed, John Shelton. Andrea Reiter, another critic interested in the use of the child's perspective in literature dealing with traumatic experiences, suggests that the impact on the reader is especially powerful because the child's outlook tends to change our view on things we thought we understood: "It is the gaze of the child that allows us to see in a new way that which we already know" Later in the same essay, Reiter points to the problems associated with memory, specifically early childhood memories which tend to be extremely fragmented and full of gaps 86 The same problem is evident in Rosencof's text from the very first page.
