Johnson got his chance to do some scouting sooner than he might have expected. At this time a great deal of the energies of the most senior British generals were taken up with the question of whether cavalry should still be trained to charge with sword and lance the view of French and Haig as well as using horses for mobility then fighting dismounted with firearms. They can also be increasingly found in on-grid systems, where they can cut energy purchase costs by means of increased self-consumption or peak load shaving.
